Travel Time WITH CHASE & BUD: COVID PASSPORT?

It's been just over a year since the pandemic barged into our lives, creating havoc in our daily routines, and bringing travel to a full stop around the globe. Since then, I have written about everything from how to cancel trips and get refunds to how to keep abreast of emerging travel protocols and restrictions. I've even given advice on how to re-build your Bucket List for future travel and how to plan and execute a pandemic-style road trip.

But you may have noticed that Travel Time has been missing the last couple of issues. Why? Bud and I have not been on a plane since returning from two weeks in Aruba in 2019. Our travel has been restricted to road trips back and forth to Florida, with all attention on staying safe—wearing masks, eating outdoors only, sanitizing everything in sight. How do you write about travel when you are not actually travelling—aside from all the above? The logical answer is you don't. You take a temporary hiatus. So that's what I've done.

Bud and I enjoyed posing with sea lions in 2008 on Kangaroo Island off the southern coast of Australia. We're hoping to hit many more beaches around the world in the months and years to come.

There are signs of hope. After vaccination successes, the CDC has eased testing and quarantine protocols for domestic travel—great news! But there are still confounding variables. The COVID-19 variants remain a threat. And how will vaccination status be incorporated into travel? Vaccination “passports” seem logical, similar to the smallpox and yellow fever vaccination documents that have been required around the world for decades. Governments and companies have been working on the idea for months, but there are significant logistical and political hurdles.

How sure am I that travel will be back? 100%! And when we're able to start booking and traveling, Travel Time will be back full bore. In the meantime, we'll be polishing our Bucket List, reviving vacation plans that we've had to cancel and dreaming of far-flung places. We hope you will too!
